Dear Parents,

This month, we will be talking about the "Water" unit. Children will observe, discuss and explore water in their classrooms and throughout their environment such as bodies of water and weather. In the second week, children will focus on changes in water temperature. They will explore and observe ice and water at different temperatures and perform experiments with water and ice. In the third week, children will think about how objects are affected when they are placed in water. This will lead them to think critically about why some items float and some sink. There are also opportunities in this week to learn about substances that dissolve or expand in water (like salt and sponges). In the final week of the unit, children will have learning experiences and do activities that encourage them to think about how water helps living things.
